Candidate for 2019-2021 At-large Director

Jessica Sheridan, AIA
AIA New York Chapter/AIA New York

Outreach. Advocacy. Innovation. Prosperity. Relevance. The AIA stands on these pillars to serve its mission as the voice of the architectural profession and a resource for its members in service to society. We have the power as practitioners and educators to elevate our status in the world. We inspire the public, create consensus, and engage with our communities unlike any other profession.

It’s time we share the delight in our profession with our clients, our communities, and society.

Climate Accountability. Climate change is the greatest social, economic, and environmental challenge we face. Architects are uniquely qualified to evaluate risk and vulnerability, mitigate and adapt, and holistically design a robust, resilient future for society.

Wellbeing & Social Equality. The architecture profession must both take part and reflect the communities in which it serves to stay relevant. Our workplaces can be a model of leadership development, energetic firm culture, flexibility and transparency, and engaged social commitment.

The Future. Our profession is changing and we need to shift the way we practice to increase our prosperity and relevance. We are adapting our businesses to provide new services to clients; we are changing our practices with emerging technology; our career trajectories no longer follow a single path. We need to involve our emerging professionals. We need to celebrate our diversity and include those who are pushing boundaries daily.

We are experiencing a pivotal moment at the AIA. Connecting with our membership is more important now than ever. We need to be ambitious and proactive. The AIA must think boldly and aspirationally about our profession. I bring a fresh perspective and I am not afraid to question the status quo.

Rob E. Walker IV, AIA
AIA Birmingham/AIA Alabama

How can AIA positively impact communities? … Or should we be asking whether AIA even can?

Yes, we can! Our culture is poised now, more than ever in AIA’s 161-year history, with the expectation that architects will, that we will respond to the new social consciousness we’ve witnessed first-hand—environmental stewardship, diversity, and equality—in ways our society never has.

Change is inevitable, as I’ve learned the hard way from my own firm for 16 years, and finding the right balance can be challenging. We need help and AIA can be a vital resource by exploring practice innovations and developing tools to a path of prosperity.

We are thought leaders, but the time for thinking alone has passed. We must enable our members in integrating cutting-edge technology, researching and responding to climate change/resilience or navigating the oncoming generational shift in our membership. AIA can help us move to the next step, developing and nurturing thought leaders for our society and our profession.

It is time for us to make an AIA that solves the challenges we face. Many of us are ready to work tirelessly to make a difference… provide the value our members demand… and show society just how relevant we are.

Elect me if this is the kind of change you want at AIA. I’m ready! Are you?

What I believe our AIA needs going into the 2020s:

Global Posture
We must strengthen our professional engagement worldwide. AIA is ascendant on the global architectural stage, providing leadership in those defining issues of our era which architects are well positioned to address. As globalization of the economy impacts us all, we must be vitally connected to the world marketplace. Foreign investment in U.S. real estate development is expanding, and your next local project could be financed from abroad. I helped found the AIA International Region in 2012 and have been a Board officer ever since; as At-large Director I will continue to build the AIA brand abroad.

Value Proposition Reinforcement
I’ve recruited a young and diverse workforce in my own practice, and I have a newly-minted B.Arch. son. Today’s generation questions the long, difficult process to become a registered architect, and engagement with AIA is not a given. They are impatient for the rewards and responsibilities that peers have in their professions, and with a life/work balance. AIA’s future begins in the schools of architecture.

Leadership in Practice
I am well grounded in the challenges of day-to-day practice. I’ve been a practice owner for over 20 years, and before that, I was 20 years on the boards. To this day I am hands-on involved with project delivery. AIA tools and resources offer value, but I know where there’s work yet to be done. As the Co-Director of the Professional Practice Commission of the International Union of Architects, I work with leader representatives of almost a million architects in formulating creative responses to the ever-evolving nature of architectural services delivery.

The Long Perspective
Many occupations are being disrupted by artificial intelligence and Internet-based service delivery—some to the point of extinction. How does our profession grow and prosper in terms of social influence and stature? I will bring a long view of existential threats to our profession and identify opportunities for using new technologies to do what architects do best—creatively synthesize. My contributions will be broad, relevant, and what we need in the 2020s.

Candidate for 2019-2020 Secretary

Jason Winters, AIA
AIA Chesapeake Bay/AIA Maryland

When I joined my local chapter, I discovered an AIA community that would help me grow personally and professionally. Over 15 years later, I look back thankfully to all of the AIA members who have welcomed, mentored, and inspired me to join in advocating for the architectural profession. This incredible journey in AIA leadership has been both a privilege and an honor, and it is in this spirit that I present my candidacy as Institute Secretary.

I believe the Secretary should continue to fulfill the vision of repositioning the Institute placing AIA as a robust professional organization with prominent leadership in all aspects of the built environment past, present, and future. Our previous Institute Secretaries have provided critical guidance with which we can continue to build on.

Moving forward, the Secretary should continue to shepherd membership needs, foster relationships amongst Institute bodies, and promote information sharing through multiple communication platforms, increased visibility, and proactive outreach. For me, the role of Secretary is one of active listening, culture building, and constant communication. These features help ensure that our AIA embarks on its mission aggressively with frameworks of best practice. I believe this is crucial as the Secretary position bears significant impact as a conduit between members, components, and AIA National.

I pledge to provide a strong voice bridging our communications between the board, components, and individual members. Outside of our organization, we will work together to expand the relevance of AIA for society. I have high aspirations for the positive impact architects have on the built environment, and it is with this sense of purpose that I ask for your support as Institute Secretary.

AIA is at a formative time of exciting transformation and I would like to serve you as the 2020 President to use my skills as a proven national leader to expand our influences. We can continue our global outreach to guide the future of design through focused and inspired leadership.

Inclusion
We will prioritize the Equity Commission movement for women, minorities, and other underrepresented members in the profession. We can dissolve insular boundaries within AIA and make better connections with academia, allied disciplines, and the public. Connecting with academia will help us share research and knowledge.

Emerging professionals
We should encourage leadership for students, Associates and emerging professionals, and help connect them to key initiatives in the Institute and in the profession. We should encourage future leaders for Board and Council service.

We can have a stronger collective voice
AIA can help strengthen and support the Centers for Architecture as a collective. We can connect to the public and foster collaborative initiatives and save threatened works of architecture. When we lead our voice becomes stronger and heard.

I am a proven and respected leader who will represent our membership with integrity. I have served on AIA’s National Board as South Atlantic Regional Director and as President of AIA Atlanta and AIA Georgia. I have also served as chair of two national communities, the Design Build Knowledge Community and the Young Architects Forum.

L. Jane Frederick, FAIA
AIA South Carolina

Looking to the future, let’s imagine where we will be in 2028.

Our workforce will be diverse, distributed, and specialized. 75% of the global workforce will be millennials. We must act on the recommendations from the Young Architect’s Practice Innovation Lab, support K-12 architectural education, and continue to build a diverse and equitable profession.

Rapidly developing economies will continue to create competition for energy, water, and other high demand resources. AIA needs to drive the research and implementation of renewable energy, materials, and how buildings affect the health and well-being of their occupants to create a cleaner, healthier, safer, and sustainable world.

The climate will still be changing. AIA must help all of our members reach the goal of carbon neutral and resilient buildings.

Governing will be de-centralized. Cities and Communities will be solving the big dilemmas of healthy cities, resiliency, homelessness, and energy independence. Architects are agents of positive change and can lead us in mitigating these big gnarly challenges that require multidisciplinary solutions.

To create a future with better buildings, better communities, and a better world, we have to be flexible, nimble, and seize opportunities to turn dilemmas into advantages thereby making a difference in social, environmental, and economic realms. We must elevate our influence; advance research and share the knowledge; support firms and members; and distribute our resources among our members and components.

As architects, when we are at our best—we don’t talk about the future—we create it.

I have the experience, qualifications, and proven leadership to serve as your president of AIA. Let’s create the future together.
